The Basics of Investing

We talk to participants and their family members every day who are not comfortable with the basics of financial planning and investing. Many people feel overwhelmed or out of their depth when talking about topics related to finance or how to invest their money for the future.

This is a common occurrence and something that many employers and even schools are beginning to recognize. According to a recent article on MarketWatch.com, North Carolina just became the 20th state to require a full credit course focusing on economics and personal finance for high school students.

The purpose of requirements like these in North Carolina and other states, is to make sure young Americans are more prepared, in terms of their overall financial literacy, which will help them to make better decisions economically.

Similar to these programs, Ohio Deferred Compensation has a wide range of financial educational information, including calculators and other resources, to help our participants learn more about the basics of finance and investing. Interested participants can visit the Retirement Basics page on our website, or you can view informational video and webinars here.

Ohio DC can help provide information about basic financial literacy and how to save for retirement. If you'd like to learn what all Ohio DC has to offer, call our Service Center today at 877-644-6457 or visit our website at Ohio457.org.
